U.S. Studies Jordan Strike Force Plan

Proposal Reportedly Urges Use of Brigades to Aid Pro-Western Gulf States

By Bernard Gwertzman New York Times Service

WASHINGTON -The Research istration has reportedly proposed to Congress a secret $225illion plan to hone two Jordanian Army brigades to serve as a special strike force for use in emergencies in Jordan and the Gulf states.

According to congressional, administration and diplomatic sources, the project has been dis-cussed on a classified basis with key members of Congress as well as with Israel. The main elements of the plan, according to an adminis-tration official, is to provide the Jordanians with transportation to move the beigades around the area. They would be supplied with C-130 transports, medical evacuation transports and advanced infantry and river-crossing equipment.

The Israelis were said to be opposed to the plan, out of concern that the equipment might be used against them, even though the purpose of the Jordanian strike force was to bolster pro-Western govern-

The idea for the force originated in late 1979, one congressional source said, after a mosque in Mecca, Saudi Arabia, was attacked by Islamic extremists. Afterward, the Jordanians conferred with the United States on the need for having the ability to move a kind of pro-Western Moslem commando group capidly in the area.

The project has been cloaked in considerable secrecy since its in-ception out of deference to sensitivities in Jordan and other Arab states, officials said. One congressional source said that the disclosure of the project might have the effect of killing it.

Information about the Jordanian force became known as the administration began a detailed review of its Middle East policy. Robert C. McFarlane, the U.S. special envoy to the Middle East, returned from the region on Wednesday night and conferred with Secretary of State George P. Shultz soon after arrival. Mr. McFarlane had lunch Thursday with Mr. Shultz and William C. Clark, the White House national security adviser who was nominaled Thursday to become secretary of the Interior Department. The purpose of the review, State Department officials said, was to decide how to move shead on efMr. Reagan's Middle East initia-

The first disclosure of the pending plan to set up the Jordanian strike force came from Israel radio Thursday, which said that Mr. Reagan had approved the project several months ago and that consultations were now going on with key committees of Congress.

One congressional source said he was told that the administration had briefed the House and Senate Intelligence Committees on the matter as well as key chairmen of other committees. Representative Clarence D. Long, a Maryland Democrat and chairman of the House foreign operations subcommittee of the Appropriations Com-mittee, was asked about the report and said: "The thing is classified, and naturally, I can't talk about it."

He added: "I am incensed that any programs are brought up to Congress on a classified basis. This prevents Congress from an adequate discussion.

" As both countries have an interest in regional security that is equally well known, it should surprise no one that questions of regional security are regularly discussed. This is the background of the relationship and I am not going to have any comment on this story or other speculation along these lines." he added.

In the previous fiscal year, Jor-dan received $75 million in military credits and the administration has proposed raising that to $115 million for the new fiscal year, which began on Oct. 1. But Jordan has been frustrated in its efforts to modernize its air force and its armed forces in general by the reluctance of Congress to approve sales to that country until it joins in negotiations with Israel.

The administration, as a result, has had to hold off on sales of F-16 or F-5G fighters to Jordan as well as of advanced anti-aircraft mis-

Sara Keays, a parliamentary secretary, at her home in Marksbury, England. Her revelations about her affair with a British cabinet minister provoked his resignation Friday.

U.K. Aide Quits After Secretary Details Affair

By Peter Osnos

Washington Post Service

LONDON - Cecil Parkinson, a cabinet minister, abruptly resigned Friday after his former secretary, pregnant with their child, disclosed details of the affair in a statement of poignancy and bitterness. She asserted that she had "both a public duty and a duty to my family to put the record straight."
The woman, Sara Keays, 36, was apparently provoked by, among other things, the manner of Mr. Parkinson's efforts to salvage his political career and public sugges-tions that she had "tried to trap" him into leaving his wife, as Miss Keays put it, and should have had an abortion to avert the scandal,

"My baby," she declared, "was conceived in a long-standing, lov-ing relationship, which I had al-lowed to continue because I believed in our eventual marriage." She said Mr. Parkinson had twice proposed to her and reneged, the second time in September.

Since the affair was revealed last week, Mr. Parkinson, staunchly supported by Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher, had seemed to be skillfully riding out the storm. In a television appearance Monday night and a speech Thursday to the Conservative Party conference in Blackpool, which was warmly recrived, he conveyed the image of a remorseful man whose anguish over a private mistake had not interfered with his public service.

His wife, Ann, appeared at his side during the speech as she has frequently all week. Late Thursday night, Mr. Parkinson, his confidence building, said he was determined to stay at his post as minister for trade and industry.

But Miss Keays's lengthy statement, given to The Times of London, provided so much detail about Mr. Parkinson's infidelity, espe-cially his indecisiveness over whether to marry her, that it again assured a furor over his behavior at least until the baby is born in January. When news of her disclosures reached Blackpool about 2 A.M. son was campaign chairman, news Friday, Mrs. Thatcher summoned agencies reported from Blackpool.

son at her speech closing the party conference, news services reported Her speech dealt largely with auclear arms in Europe.]

Miss Keavs's statement asserts that Mr. Parkinson had first proposed to her in 1979 and then changed his mind when he learned last May that she was pregnant.

She implored him, the statement continues, to advise Mrs. Thatcher of the situation as the country went through its national election campaign, of which Mr. Parkinson as chairman of the party was a principal architect, but "he would not agree to this." This is the most damaging assertion because Mr. Parkinson has suggested all along that he withheld nothing from the prime minister as the problem developed although he has refused to discuss the timing of conversations with Mrs. Thatcher.

Miss Keays said that on polling day, June 9. Mr. Parkinson "sought a reconciliation" and proposed again, asking her to leave her job at Parliament. But after going on a vacation with his family, Mr. Parkinson advised her on Sept. I that he had decided not to marry her after all, she said.

By then, newspapers had approached her with rumors of her relationship to Mr. Parkinson, she said. When the magazine Private Eye published the story last week, Miss Keavs said that if Mr. Parkinson did not act immediately, she would "be obliged to defend myself." Mr. Parkinson then issued a brief statement on the relationship.

Their agreement had been to refrain from any further comment. Miss Keays said, but an effort promptly began to "rehabilitate" Mr. Parkinson which had the effect, she implies, of smearing her.

No Policy Change Seen As Chun Appoints New South Korean Ministers

By William Chapman Washington Post Service

SEOUL — President Chun Doo Hwan on Friday named new ministers and aides to replace those killed in a bombing in Burma last Sunday and replaced several others

The new appointments do not appear to signal a major change in the direction of his government and seemed mainly designed to assure a continuity after the tragedy that took the lives of 17 South Koreans.

The new prime minister is Chin Yi Chong, who had held the position of representative chairman of the Democratic Justice Party, which is the majority party largely controlled by the president. He replaces Kim Sang Hyup, who was killed. The new foreign minister is Lee Won Kyong, who replaces Lee Bum Suk, who also died in the

In an unusual move shortly after the cabinet meeting, Mr. Chun called in leaders of the country's four political parties and reassured them that he intended to leave the presidency after his term expired in 1988, according to a party leader who was present. Ko Chung Hoon, head of the New Socialist Party, also quoted Mr. Chun as saying that some offi-cers in the armed forces had wanted to retaliate against North Korea for allegedly planting the bomb in Rangoon at a wreath-laying ceremony in an attempt to kill him. The homb exploded before Mr. Chun. arrived. ■ Burmese Purge Blamed Robert Trumbull of The New York Times reported earlier from

A political purge carried out in May is being cited in here as largely responsible for the Burmese securisystem's failure to prevent the bombing last Sunday. The purge, ordered by Ne Win, the former general who has ruled Burma since seizing power in 1962, removed the nation's security chief and substantially dismantled his organization.

As a result, a person close to the nation's intelligence services said, the government's security unit was no longer able to "show anything like its usual effectiveness." This explanation was also advanced by diplomats here who have been trying to figure out how the time bomb that exploded could have been put in place undetected.

The diplomats pointed out that the bomb was of a type unobtainable in Burma and could not even have been made here. It had been placed in the roof of a memorial pavilion, a structure that has no walls. These sources and others also asked how the device could have escaped notice if the Burmese security agents had carried out their customary painstaking in-spection of a site where an official function is to be held.

For an explanation of the security failure, the sources cited the disssal in May of Brigadier General Tin Oo, who was the overall chief of intelligence and security services as head of the National Intelligence Bureau. He was said to have made the mistake of becoming too prom-inent a personage in the shadow of the 73-year-old Ne Win, who resigned as president two years are but retained ultimate authority as chairman of the ruling party. Ne Win reportedly followed up the dismissal of Tin Oo by purging those loyal to the security chief. In curity work.

Near the western city of Kaiserslautern, the demonstrators heeded a police warning to clear the road leading to an army depot. But at the Baltic port of Bremerhaven, 200 miles (320 kilometers) north of Kaiserslautern, they had to be moved to allow the passage of trucks carrying supplies to a U.S.

There were two other developments in West Germany on Friday that concerned U.S. nuclear weapons in Europe.

And a Bonn government spokesman confirmed reports that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization would remove some of its short-range nuclear weapons now deployed in Europe.

IAEA Urges Nuclear Boycott of Israel
VIENNA (UPI) — The International Atomic Energy Agency called
Friday for a nuclear boycott against Israel unless it withdraws its threat to attack Arab nuclear reactors.

Foes of Tanaka Boycott Diet 2d Day

TOKYO (UPI) — Opposition lawmakers boycotted the Diet for the second consecutive day Friday to force a vote seeking the removal from the parliament of former Prime Minister Kaknei Tanaka following his conviction on a bribery charge.

With opposition parties insisting on giving priority to a vote on the resolution on the Diet floor, all other parliamentary business was halted.

Mr. Tanaka, 65, has vowed to fight to keep his seat. He is considered the kingmaker of the governing Liberal Democratic Party and is Prime Minister Yasuhiro Nakasone's chief political supporter.

Russians Said to Harass Jet Searchers

WASHINGTON (AP) - Soviet ships steamed "dangerously close" to Japanese vessels in renowed harassment as efforts continued to recover the black box and cockpit recorders from the downed South Korean airtiner, U.S. defense officials said Friday.

"Soviet ships have steamed dangerously close to Japanese units, which have had to alter their mooning positions to avoid possible collision or entanglement of mooring lines and buoys," an official said.

Meanwhile, the Pentagon denied reports that a decision had been made to call off the search, which seven U.S. and two Japanese ships have been conducting since shortly after the airliner was shot down by a Soviet fighter on Sept. 1.

WASHINGTON (Reuters) - The United States could have by 1990 a ground-based laser weapon able to destroy Soviet satellites even in distant orbits, according to George Keyworth, President Ronald Reagan's science adviser.

Mr. Keyworth also said in a speech Thursday that major advances by U.S. scientists over the past year could make Mr. Reagan's proposed space-based nuclear missile defense system feasible before long.

He fold the Armed Forces Communications and Electronics Association that both systems should be demonstrated publicly once they are operational in an effort to convince the Soviet Union to be more flexible BRIDGETOWN, Barbados (UPI) - British diplomats said Friday reported thousands of customers they had received reports of a coup attempt against the Cuban-backed pulled out dollars from saving account of Prime Minister Maurice Bishop of Grenada.

The reports, and subsequent broadcasts on Radio Free Grenada, indicated the coup attempt began Thursday but was crushed. Telephone lines to the island nation of 111,000 were severed. The incident appeared to be part of a power struggle among the Marxist leaders of the country, which lies 90 miles (145 kilometers) north of Venezuela.

Martin Rickerd, spokesman for the British High Commission in Barbados, said he received a report from the British representative in Grenada that Deputy Prime Minister Bernard Coard had overthrown Mr. Bishop. The Caribbean Broadcasting Corporation in Barbados said Mr. Bishop had been placed under house arrest. But a subsequent broadcast from Grenada said Mr. Coard had resigned and the head of the country's security forces, identified as Cephus St. Paul, had been arrested for spreading rumors.

Salvador Peace Talks Stumble on Elections Issue

By Robert J. McCartney Washington Post Service

MANAGUA — After only two sessions since the outset six weeks ago, talks between the U.S.-backed government of El Salvador and rebels seeking its overthrow have ground to a halt over the key issue of elections.

Although both sides said that they remained willing to discuss a negotiated end to the Saivadoran civil war, no further sessions have been planned. In statements Thursday, each side stressed that the other would have to change its position on elections before the talks could continue.

The government insists that the only issue to be discussed is the guerrillas' participation in elections early next year, something the guerrillas have steadfastly refused on grounds that a government-run vote would not be fair and their security could not be assured.

The rebels demand formation of a new provisional government, in which they would be included, before elections take place. "In these conditions it's very clear that these people don't have any willingness or capacity to continue the dialogue," Salvador Samayoa, a member of the rebels' diplomatic-political commission, said in referring to the Salvadoran government.

The head of the Salvadoran government's negotiating team in San Salvador blamed the guerrillas for the deadlock. "They have rejected our proposal. They are trying to

Following months of tentative, indirect contacts and threats of boycott or sabotage by extremists on both sides, the talks began with fanfare, but little apparent substance in Bogotá, Colombia, on Aug. 29.

At the time, they were considered the first sign that the nearly four-year-old civil war could be resolved at the negotiating table rather than on the battlefield. After a second meeting in Bogotá on Sept. 29, both sides emerged showing little hope that much could be accomplished. There has been no subsequent contact between The U.S. special envoy for Central America, Richard B.

Stone, who had made separate contacts with the guerrilla front, had promoted the dialogue. But the Salvadoran talks were bedeviled from the start by procedural difficulties and charges from each side that the other was participating only for show. The rebels accused the government of failing to show up for a meeting Sept. 11 in Panama and of refusing to provide written proposals at the sessions. The government complained that the rebels sent second-ranking represenaccording to senior Salvadoran government officials. The Marxist-led insurgents, for their part, maintain that elections alone cannot solve El Salvador's political and social problems and that they cannot safely participate in elections until far-right elements are purged from the army and security forces. U.S. officials said they were afraid that they would lose in a free election.

Since the Sept. 29 meeting, each side has launched a publicity campaign to pin the blame on the other for the stalemate. The Salvadoran Peace Commission, which attended the talks on behalf of the government, took out advertisements charging that the rebel proposal was "totalitarian."

To demonstrate their good faith, rebel leaders here made available a copy of their proposal presented to the government at the second Bogotá meeting.

The nine-page document proposed a two-week "National Debate for Peace," in which a wide variety of political and social groups would discuss how to solve the alvadoran conflict.

We saw it as an intermediate proposal," said Marisol Galindo, one of the rebels' representatives at the meeting. If participants in the debate had backed the government's call for elections, she said, the rebels would have been isolated. The government, however, restated its position that the only valid topic for discussion was the guerrillas' participation in elections.

Nicaraguan Rebels Attack Oil Port, Blow Up Pipelines

The Associated Press MANAGUA — Nicaraguan rebels on Friday attacked Puerto Sandino, one of two Nicaraguan oil ports on the Pacific coast, blowing up recently repaired pipelines and other installations, a top Nicaraguan official said.

Daniel Ortega Saavedra, coordinator of Nicaragua's Sandinist junta also said an invasion of Nicaragua by the Honduran Army or U.S. troops "is imminent" and that his leftist government had asked several countries for military aid.

Mr. Ortega said that as a result of the attack on Puerto Sandino, 43 miles (70 kilometers) northwest of Managua, and the other Pacific oilunloading port of Corinto, the junta had extended gasoline rationing and would impose other emergency energy measure

TEGUCIGALPA, Honduras -The Honduran government on Friday told the Kissinger commission on Central America that it needs about $500 million a year in American aid to overcome a deep economic cusis.

The Honduran declaration, in a report to the commission on its penultimate stop in a six-nation regional tour, underlined the hopes Central American leaders that Henry A. Kissinger's mission might result in a sharp increase in American economic aid for the financially stricken area.

Repeatedly since the commission members started their tour of Central America in Panama on Sunday, they have heard appeals for economic help as well as complaints about the danger of war arising from confrontation between Nicaragua's Sandinist rulers and their U.S.-supported neigh-

SPEAK FRENCE

If the Russians Walk Out

It appears that the Soviet Union is going to walk out of the Geneva arms limitation talks. The Warsaw Pact foreign ministers, concluding their meeting in Solia on Friday, asked that the talks continue, But, as they seem to have made postponement of the West's deployment of medium-range missiles a condition for this - presumably while Soviet SS-20 deployment continues it does not seem likely to change things. The Western powers are now about to deploy Pershing-2 and cruise missiles in response to the ongoing build-up of SS-20s.

A Soviet decision to leave the Geneva talks, if indeed it is taken, will widely be interpreted in the West as one more step in a Soviet campaign to blackmail West European governments and separate them from the United States by playing upon the anxieties of a public that is deeply, and justifiably, anxious about the pace and direction of the

It will be interpreted, as well, as an attempt to take advantage of the coming presidential campaign in the United States. The Soviet Union will be seen as inviting the Democratic Party opposition in the United States to blame the Reagan administration for the breakdown in Geneva. It will be seen as inviting President Reagan's challengers - assuming that he does run for a second term — to promise new concessions to the Soviet Union.

This kind of calculated exploitation of the West's internal divisions is old stuff in Soviet policy. It more often fails than succeeds. Soviet analysts persistently misunderstand the real motivations and commitments of the contending forces in the West, as they debate these issues. Moreover, a Soviet walkout from Geneva now would come at just the time when the Western powers, the themselves more open to compromise than at any time in the last three years.

The Soviet argument that it has a right to missile forces equivalent to the combined forces of its potential enemies - to have "equality of security" -- is not wholly unreasonable. The Soviet Union is the primary target of British, French and Chinese, as well as U.S., deterrent forces - even though it has only itself to blame that this is so.

It is nonetheless a reality, and it should be a negotiable problem, provided that the Soviet Union bargains in good faith. The problem for the Western powers is that the ambitions and rapid build-up of Soviet SS-20 forces has tended to outstrip the ratio-nales offered for it. It has been looked upon, with good reason, as deliberately destabilizing. Whatever the merits of NATO's response, the fact remains that the Pershing and cruise installations follow, and did not begin, the new mid-range weapons race. In our opinion, Soviet withdrawal from Geneva, while deeply to be regretted, should (and will) be ignored by the Western powers in making their own decisions. When the U.S. election season is past, it is reasonable to think that the Soviet Union will come back to the negotiating table.

But if the Soviet leaders were wise, they would not lose the coming year. Negotiations can and should continue. The United States has made significant changes in its own position. The Soviet leadership should understand that their real choice at the moment is between a trivial attempt to obtain propaganda gains - altering nothing of substance during the year to come - and the prospect of constructive change, which survives in Geneva.

INTERNATIONAL HERALD TRIBUNE

Gamble on El Salvador

Briefly last summer, it seemed that a "dia-logue" might start in El Salvador that could provide a means other than warfare to deal with the country's profound internal tensions. But neither the government nor the guerrillas nor their patrons made the political exertions necessary to give talks a fair chance. The government, which cannot ensure the safety even of loyal citizens, kept demanding that its foes join early elections under its aegis. The guerrillas continued refusing to put their bid for power to popular test. Another go at talks may not be possible until the two sides have completed their current round of fighting.

Barring the unexpected collapse of one side, the momentum of conflict will not be slowed unless the United States slows it. Though the Reagan administration is not alone responsible for the negotiating impasse, probably only the United States can break it. But the judgment dominating current American policy is that negotiation is a trap, and success in battle is essential and achievable. President Reagan has only begun to think how to draw the election-minded part of the Salvadoran opposition into a political process.

Meanwhile, there is a new round of political murders by the death squads that operate in and around the armed forces. The administra-partly, one suspects, to head off tendencies in Congress to withhold aid. The familiar conflict that overtakes American policy in crumbling Third World situations is in full view. The president calls for the high level of support necessary to attain the strategic objectives he has foremost in mind. Many in Congress call for the lower level consistent with the humanitarian and social considerations they put first. Mr. Kissinger warns the Salvadorans not to make Americans choose between security and human rights, but the record shows they will almost certainly try to have it both ways, with the result that both presidential priorities and congressional ones will be frustrated.

There is a third way, which Congress perhaps cannot force the president to take but which would be in the national interest. The two should together pursue a negotiated solution. That requires Congress to put talks ahead of rights and reforms and to provide substantial aid in order to encourage the Salvadoran government to take the risk of serious talks.

President Reagan would have to put talks ahead of any thought of prevailing over the guerrillas on the battlefield. With aid thus assured, he would improve prospects for negotiating success. It is a gamble, and he should take it to end a brutal war.

'Reform' in South Africa

White South Africans, as they debate whether to vote on Nov. 2 in favor of a new constitution which departs fundamentally from the one they inherited from the 1910 Act of Union, have been told by their government that they are being asked to endorse the con-tinuation of the "reform" process. This they understand to mean the adequate transformation of apartheid so as to escape the racial confrontation on which their country has appeared to be determined for so many years.

One of the changes proposed is that the 4.5 million whites admit the two other minority groups, the 2.5 million mixed-blood coloreds and the 800,000 Indians, into a parliamentary system of three chambers. On the face of it, this appears to be a landable move.

Unfortunately, on fuller examination this looks like being an insufficient interpretation of the government's intention. The 20 million black majority is in no doubt of this. The black rejection is near unanimous. The blacks are assured that they should hope for no role in

It seems evident — to the outside view that a political system that denies the wishes of the great majority, even while tardily redressing an injustice to some others, can hardly be the way to a healthy future. If such a couclu-sion brings unsympathetic allies at the polling station, then so be it. - The Financial Times (London).

Reagan, Peace Propagandist

Ronald Reagan is proving to be a more adroit — or luckier — peace propagandist than Yuri V. Andropov. Since the Soviet party chief succeeded Leonid Brezhnev 11 months ago, he has repeatedly lost or forfeited skirishes in the battle for world opinion.

Much of what has happened is due to Soviet shortcomings rather than American cunning. Mr. Andropov's first major miscue was to intervene clumsily in the West German elec-tion last March. His obvious preference for the Social Democratic Party served only to buttress the victory of the Christian Democratic chancellor, Helmut Kohl. Then came the drubbing suffered in June by the British Labor Party, which has gone the way of unilateral disarmament. But it was the shooting down of the South Korean airliner, with its implications of a dangerous Soviet paranoia, that finally destroyed Mr. Andropov's prospects for a successful peace campaign.

WASHINGTON — The ugly events involving W South Korea — the downing of its ardiner, and the Rangoon bombing, which killed 20 people, including four South Korean cabinet ministers fit a pattern we have almost come to accept as par for the course for the divided peninsula.

In the past decade alone, there have been many outrages: a tree-cutting incident in the demilitarized zone in which two American soldiers were brutally hacked to death (1976); the Korean Central Intelligence Agency plot to kidnap and assassinate the opposition leader Kim Dae Jung (1973); the assassination of President Park Chung Hee's wife (1974), then the murder of Mr. Park (1979); the rebellion and massacre at Kwangju (1980); now the apparent attempt to kill President Chun Dao Kung in included Parent Doo Hwan, in isolated Burma

The prime suspect always seems to be the North Koreans — with understandable though not always sufficient reason. Theirs has been a record of truculence filled with bizarre murder plots against South Korean leaders, tunnels under the DMZ, spies sent overland, shootouts in the waters surrounding the peninsula.

Two of the world's largest armies glare across a tenuous truce line. No matter how many times each comes up with a new peace proposal, neither seems genninely interested in reducing hostility. The North uses tension to justify an extraordinary percentage of its gross national product for arms expenditures and to impose barsh control over daily life.

The South, whose human rights record is acceptable only in comparison with the North's, invokes tion in the political process, press censorship, restrictions on unions and the right to strike.

The dangerously provocative rhetoric and mad race toward another Korean War must end. Each occurrence chips away at the time left before some trigger-happy general on either side gives the signal for retaliation that could engulf Asia, and America, in conflict.

What can be done to lower the temperature? President Reagan's proposed visit to Seoul is no more an answer there than it would have been for Manila. In the last 25 years, four American presidents have visited Seoul and two South Korean presidents have come to Washington - with no visible impact on relations between the North and the South

The United States must begin with a redirection of policy toward the peninsula. Admittedly, American leverage with North Korea is negligible. Other than a more imaginative effort toward drawing

Pyongyang into the community of nations, there remains little that Washington can offer. But small steps would be useful increased scientific, press and cultural contact, especially dealings in interna-tional conferences, might help. It would not burt for a paramoid Pyongyang to be more exposed to Western democratic values and thinking. Restricting North Korea's United Nations observer delegation to travel in New York City hardly serves the aims of modern diplomacy. The DMZ situation is too dangerous for North Korea to be so ignorant of American policy and resolve.

But with South Korea one can imagine more aggressive initiatives, including public and private expressions of the urgency to move toward an open society and a truly democratic government. There is growing impatience and anger among South Korea's youth and intellectuals with Washington's continued support of authoritarian rule.

The airliner tragedy and Rangoon bombing may have little in common, save for a disgraceful illustration of senseless resort to violence. Both involve Koreans who, in the North and South, have known enough killing and sacrifice. Both sides are armed to the teeth. Neither is long on temper. The United States is committed to go to war if need be. No less than in Central America, it cannot rely alone on military aid and preparedness to avoid conflict.

In Lebanon, They Pay The Price

By Flora Lewis

BEIRUT — It is now clear that there was an amazing misunderstanding between Lebanon's president, Amin Gemayel, and top American officials last spring. It may have cost the lives of more than 1,000 Lebanese as well as the U.S. marines who died in Beirut.

Nobody can prove that the bloody battles of the last month would not have happened with some reasonable diplomatic foresight. But there was a direct chain of events.

It began with negotiation of the Israeli-Lebanese normalization agreement after last year's invasion. The United States was pressing Israel to withdraw, since the Lebanese crisis had derailed what little was going on in Middle East peace efforts.

Israel was determined to salvage as much as possible of the invasion's political goals. It could not get the full treaty it sought, so in tough nego-tiations nourished by the United States, it settled for an undeclared peace with Lebanon.

A condition of withdrawal was that Syria pull all its forces out of Lebanon at the same time. The United States accepted. The Syrians; Washington said with faith in Allah.

would come along.
The Syrian president, Hafez al-Assad, was furious at being ignored. He was receiving huge new arms supplies from the Soviet Union, which had been humiliated by the ease with which Israel destroyed Soviet-made surface-to-air missiles in 1982. He had convinced Moscow that its prestige required restocking him.

Mr. Gemayel knew Lebanon could not be patched back together without Syrian acquiescence, and that Mr. Assad would assert Syria's interest: Why then did he accept U.S. assurances that the Israeli pact was simply a first step?

He says he was "uneasy," and urged the U.S. special envoy, Philip Habib, and Secretary of State George Shultz to make sure of Syria. They told him not to worry, he says, that the United States knew what it was doing, leave it to them. American diplomats say just the opposite. They say Mr. Shultz told. Mr. Gemayel that he had brought the Israelis to settle, and it was up to the Lebanese to persuade Syria.

Clearly, the Americans were in a hurry to bring home a first-step agreement, and they spoke in gener-alities. Meanwhile, Washington wastrumpeting its dedication to the "independence, sovereignty and territorial integrity" of Lebanon, and Mr. Gemayel thought that meant the United States could deliver. Both sides used vague phrases meant to please without pinning down grubby detail. Each thought the other got the real message and politely avoided probing. The result was a nasty surprise.

Syria's stand hardened. Neither the United States nor Lebanon could get Mr. Assad to budge from his demand that the agreement be canceled and that Israel pull out before further negotiations.

caught unawares, but for political and economic reasons they decided to move back to a more easily de-fended line. There was plenty of no-tice. The armed Lebanese factions maneuvered to grab what was available. Massacre was advertised and it happened. Mr. Assad was ready to support a massive proxy battle to prove, with metal, that Syria was still on the scene.

An American, Colonel Arthur Fintel, head of the group training the Lebanese Army, reckoned that in one six-hour period 12,000 shells were pumped onto the western side of the Chus mountains. That is lavish, even by the most bellicose standards. He calculated the ammunition alone cost $8 million at American prices, about $3.5 million at Soviet prices. Now, everybody recognizes the tables have been inmed. From being made to look impotent, Syria has claimed the trumps. President Reagan's recent denunciation of Syria as opposing peace, and his sweeping declaration that the United States will not allow the Middle East to be "absorbed" by the Russians, pleased Mr. Gemayel's supporters, but it has not helped them deal with Mr. Assad. They fervently echo Washington's rhetoric about the vital Western stakein their ability to resist Syrian pres-

1908: An America's Cup Controversy LONDON - "The amendment to the universal rule adopted by the conference of the Atlantic Coast Yacht Club has no effect whatsoever on international racing," said Mr. William P. Burton, owner of the famous cutter Britomart. "But where the difficulty as regards the challenge for the America's Cap comes in is that the New York Yacht Club, for reasons best known to itself, will not accept a challenge from Sir Thomas Lipton. Personally it seems to me you might as well consider the new rule as of no value, when you dig back into ancient history to surround a challenge cup with a lot of conditions which today are not only obsolete but against common sense. In the highest interests of sports, American yachtsmen should put aside those ancient conditions."

The Red Cross: Dealing Quietly With a Mad World

N EW YORK — It is a truism, which few people in the news business bother to dispute these days, that the press is drawn disproportionately to violent, dramatic, sudden and unexpected change. There are many untold behind-the-scenes stories that the pressure of space and the supposed lack of reader interest keep out of the paper. Who knew until the last desperate couple of weeks that the United Nations had observers in Beirut attempting the perhaps fruitless task of providing an independent source of information for the Security Council? How many people recall that, dur-ing the war that followed the Israeli invasion of Lebanon last year, Unicef took over responsibility for making sure that Beirut continued to receive fresh water supplies? Perhaps the biggest continuing un-told story is that of the International Committee of the Red Cross, It often gets a mention in newspaper war dispatches, but asually at the bottom. Part of the fault is the media's.

Red Cross to operate as secretly as it can. It feels it can get much further with governments if it maintains strict confidentiality. A few stories, however, can be told. One is the file published by the revolutionary regime in Iran after the fall of the shah. It revealed how the Red Cross had persuaded the shah to let it visit the prisons where torture allegedly was carried out.

It had taken the agency seven years to convince the shah and to convince him on Red Cross terms - that it nesses present and be allowed to repeat the visits. Lagerfeld's Scissors Snip His Chloe Tie

By Hebe Dorsey International Herald Tribune

PARIS — Friday was Karl La-gerfeld's farewell Chioé collection - and it was full of real and symbolic scissors, which told the story. Lagerfeld confirmed after the show that he is severing ties with the house's owners, Jacques Lenoir and Gaby Aghion. Chloé, he added, is about to be sold to an American group that had a representative at the collection, but La-gerfeld would not reveal the name. Lagerfeld, who never felt well treated at Chloe, added: "You ask for a glass of water and it comes out tepid." This hardly measures up to the royal treatment, complete with lavish flats and private planes, that Lagerfeld gets from other partners, such as Fendi.

Scissors were everywhere --- dangling from a ribbon, worn as beltbuckles, hanging from a plastic visor, pinned up in twins as brooches on suit lapels, or brandished in the air by the models. The most emphatic, and slightly sinister ones, were embroidered on a black dress decorated on one side with two triangles, filled-in with blood-red

The pace of the collection was another clue. Sleepy-eyed models walked to the strings of soporific music, as if they did not believe in the whole thing. Even the audience, usually fairly tense and excited at

Yet, there were beautiful clothes. even if they came too late. Some were pure nostalgia, especially the frotby champagne chiffon and lace that Lagerfeld always did so well, and the embroidered evening dress-es, some of which had whimsical planes flying through hazy blue clouds. Both Saks' Ellen Saltzman and Henri Bendel's president, Geraldine Stutz, liked the evening dresses and said they would buy them. But otherwise, the spirit of the show was down. Lagerfeld readily admitted that his heart was not in it, adding, "But there were

At Jean-Louis Scherrer, the pret-tiest photographer was the actress Ursula Andress, who joined the working press for the benefit of The Best, a magazine put out by Massimo Gargia. U.S. Unions Likely to Fail in Efforts In Week To Soften Airline-Deregulation Law

NEW YORK — The filing by Continental Airlines for protection under Chapter 11 of the U.S. bankruptcy law and the threat by Eastern Airlines to do the same have prompted some union leaders to press Congress to reconsider the deregulation of the airline industry. The president of the Air Line Filots Association, Henry Duffy, and Lane Kirkland, the president of the AFL-CIO, have agreed that Mr. Kirkland and airline union officials should meet with congressional leaders soon to see if new laws are needed to remedy the industry's bankruptcy laws to prevent efforts to use them to break labor contracts, but they also want a reexamination of the law that deregulated the airlines, to stop "these tremendous financial losses" that the industry is experiencing. In the first half of this year, the major carriers collectively lost half a billion dollars on operations.

According to Mr. Duffy, the unions not only want to tighten the

The chances that the union leaders can turn back the clock are slim, however. Too many carriers have accepted deregulation, although they did it reluctantly, and are now geared to operating in the more

Some airlines have sprung into being to make the most of the industry's new freedoms. Among air travelers, there is a strong constituency for allowing the low-cost carriers to proliferate, and among industry people, there is wide acknowledgement that under deregulation, the industry is becoming more efficient.

The Arrine Deregulation Act of 1978 was passed over the strong opposition of most airline executives, so the current unhappiness is not the first outcry that deregulation has gone too far.

Reinstatement Call Unheeded

In March 1982, when the airlines were waging fare wars that helped drive Braniff Airways to seek protection under the bankruptcy law and weakened other carriers, Edward J. Daly, chairman of World Airways, appealed to the Civil Aeronautics Board to reinstate the regulation of fares. Mr. Daly's protest was particularly telling because he had support ed deregulation and had used it to expand his airline greatly. His appeal

Even Eastern's chief executive, Frank Borman, who fought deregula-tion, conceded in an interview that to put limits on the industry again "is a battle that can't be won at this time." To expect legislative relief "would be a false hope," he said.

Mr. Borman and most other industry executives are making their decisions on the assumption that the competitive pressures of deregulation are here to stay. Eastern, for example, is pressing to curtail its labor costs and last week agreed with its three unions to an independent audit to determine if the carrier needs further wage concessions to become

. The major carriers are adapting to the new environment. Most have used decontrol to drop unprofitable routes. Many are building their routes around a major hub to better control their traffic.

The abandonment of many smaller markets by major carriers, as well as the new freedom to raise or lower fares quickly, has given regional carriers and new airlines a chance to grow.

The new freedoms have also increased the opportunity for management to make mistakes. Too rapid expansion into new markets was one of the major causes of Braniff's filing under the bankrupcy laws.

Airlines Prefer Change

Despite the greater uncertainties, most airline managements would not have it any other way. John R. Zeeman, senior vice president for marketing at United Airlines, noted that since deregulation his surfine has reduced its work force to 43,000 from 54,000 while carrying the same number of passengers. The lesson, he said in an interview, was that under regulation "we were not as efficient as we should have been."

The wrenching that the industry is now undergoing, Mr. Zeeman said, grows out of the abrupt change in a system that had been built up by 40 years of regulation.

decontrol, they have met firm resistance for concessions from most unions, which seek to protect the gains won under regulation. This has left the larger, long-established carriers in the predicament of having to compete with the new airlines, spawned by the deregulation, whose costs are much lower because they are not unionized or enjoy union contracts providing for lower wages and benefits and more flexible work rules.

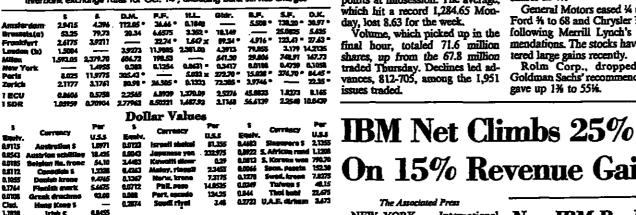

The larger carriers such as Continental, Eastern, Trans World and Republic are trying to correct that imbalance by bringing wage and benefit levels closer to those of the low-cost carriers. The battle will be fought over the bargaining table or in the courts as in the case of Continental, which has used the protection of Chapter 11 to slim down and to cut wages almost in half.

At this point it seems that the union leaders can expect little legislative relief to limit deregulation or change federal bankruptcy laws.

Fed Says M-1 Fell

NEW YORK — In a report that sent interest rates tumbling, the Federal Reserve Board said Friday that the narrowest measure of the U.S. money supply fell $1.1 billion in early October.

Economists interpreted the re-port as a sign that the Federal Reserve was unlikely to push interest rates higher anytime soon.

The Federal Reserve said its M-1 money measure, which includes cash in circulation and deposits in checking and similar accounts, fell to $517.2 billion in the week ended environment. Most have Oct. 5 from $518.3 billion the week before. That was a mild surprise to Wall Street analysts, who had exdrop unprofitable routes. pected an increase.

"It's clear that the M-1 data was influenced by the new deregulated bank certificates," said William V. Sollivan, Jr., senior vice president at Dean Witter Reynolds, Inc. "The other checkables (interestbearing NOW accounts) component of M-I showed a sharp decline, which suggests that some of this money was transferred to the Economists said they also were encouraged by the Federal Reserve's report that its two broader measures of the money supply rose less than generally expected.

The dollar plunged in late New York trading after the M-1 report, from 2.6140 Deutsche marks in early afternoon to 2.5975.

Analysts Say Copper Glut May Cause Permanent Damage to U.S. Industry

By Steven Greenhouse New York Times Service

NEW YORK -- It is used for electrical wiring in everything from automobiles to amplifiers; so copper prices usually increase as the U.S. economy gathers steam. But despite the recovery now going on, a worldwide copper glut is keeping prices unusually low. Spot copper prices have plummeted from their February 1979 high of $1.25 a pound (.45 kilogram) to less than 65 cents Thursday.

Industry analysts have predicted that one result of this would be a permanent shrinkage of the U.S. copper industry - a shrinkage that could continue the uncertainty surrounding earnings for the major

Each year the United States produces about 1.5 million metric tons of copper and imports 250,000 tons. Six million tons are produced annually in non-Communist countries. The major exporters are Chile, Peru, Zambia and Zaire. Chile produces one million tons a year, Zambia, 600,000 annually, and Zaire, Seemingly oblivious to the decline in prices, the major exporting countries are churning out huge amounts of copper to help pay their debts. This has helped push copper inventories at the Commodity Exchange of New York and the London Metal Exchange — which buy excess supply — to a near record, 750,000 tons, up from 300,000 tons in early 1982.

"In these countries, the mines are owned by the government, and the important thing for them is to produce copper to obtain hard currency," said Bette Raptopoulos, an analyst at Prudential-Bache Securities Inc. "They're not governed by a profit-loss scenario. In a severe recession, they continue to produce copper. In fact, the lower the price falls, the more Chile produces to make up for the lower price."

But even as exporters have stepped up production, demand has remained relatively flat. The reason is that while the recovery in the United States has been vigorous, the European and Japanese economies re-main sluggish and there has been little improvement among the Third World countries.

"World copper consumption for the last seven months is down probably 3 percent from 1982 levels, in contrast to U.S. consumption, which is up about 4 percent," said William G. Siedenburg, an analyst with mith Barney, Harris Upham & Co.

Normally, according to Mr. Siedenburg, copper demand would increase I percent a year in the industrialized countries and by 8 percent in industrializing countries, which still need significant electricity-generating and telephone-system installation.

With spot copper prices on the commodities futures markets falling below 70 cents last year, many U.S. companies closed their mines because their break-even price was an estimated 85 to 90 cents a pound. But earlier this year Phelps Dodge Corp. and other J.S. producers reopened some of their mines because of the healthy prognosis for the economy. At that time, futures traders were pushing the spot market price to above 80 cents. The actual, cash delivery price now averages about five cents a pound higher. Prices then receded as the year progressed, as the recovery abroad stalled and as commodities traders fell 0.3 percent after increasi worried that the U.S. surge in housing construction

Output in U.S. Climbed 1.5% In September

By John M. Berry Washington Past Service

WASHINGTON - The U.S. economy chalked up another good month in September, the 10th month of the recovery, as industrial production rose 1.5 percent from the previous month and producer prices for finished goods edged up only 0.2 percent, according to government reports released Friday.

With last month's increase in the output of U.S. factories, mines and utilities, the index of industrial production is only slightly below its previous peak in July 1981, when the recession began, the Federal Reserve Board reported.

The seasonally adjusted gains in production were "sizable and widespread, with especially large increases occurring in automotive products and in business equipment," the Fed said. The month's 1.5-percent rise followed upwardly revised increases of 1.2 percent in August and 2.2 percent in July. The latter figures originally were estimated at 0.9 percent and 2 percent, respectively.

The small 0.2-percent rise in finished goods prices on a seasonally adjusted basis left them only 1.4 percent higher than they were a year ago, the same as in the two previous months, the Labor Department said. The monthly increase in August was 0.4 percent and in July 0.1 percent.

Consumer food prices charged by producers in September climbed 0.7 percent, the largest monthly in-crease since last April. But substantial declines in automobile and light-truck prices at the end of the model year kept finished goods prices other than for foods unchanged, on average, for Septem-

Producer prices for capital goods percent in August, the department

The indexes for intermediate and crude goods also showed only a few signs of an acceleration in inflation. Intermediate goods prices rose 0.7 percent as food and feed prices rose 4.2 percent. However, at the crude-goods level, foodstuffs and feedstuffs prices increased only 0.2 percent following a 3.9 percent jump in August.

Finished energy-goods prices, the category for refined petroleum products to be used as sold and which are entered into the index with a one-month lag, continued to decline. They fell 0.2 percent in September and were down 5.5 percent in the last 12 months.

The Federal Reserve said that production in every one of its market groupings except utilities rose l percent or more last month. Output of utilities fell 1.1 percent as demand dropped with the end of the summer's heat wave.

At 153.5 percent of its 1967 level low its July, 1981, peak of 153.9. However, it was also barely higher than the 153.5 level recorded in March, 1979, 41/2 years ago.

Another breakdown also shows the extent to which production for consumers has led the recovery. Output of consumer goods last month was about 5 percent higher than it was at that July 1981 peak, while production of business equipment and of durable-goods materials, especially steel, re-mained well below their earlier

U.K. Inflation Up Last Month

The Associated Press LONDON - Britain's annu al inflation rate rose to 5.1 percent in September, the highest level in seven months, the government reported Friday. The rate was 4.6 percent in August

It was the third consecutive increase in the monthly Retail Price Index since June, when inflation stood at a 15-year lov of 3.7 percent.

The statement said Septem ber's increase was due mainly to rises in the price of food, cars and transportation. But officials said there was no underlying change in price pressures.

this space have stressed the immie of an upturn in precious seen experts warning of interest rates, gold sales by Brazil and huge Comex-ware-house silver supplies. In case you've been listening to chronic alarmists instead of gathering facts, note that during two tradsessions of climatic amateur-liquidation in early October, bearish contingent sold more gold than Brazil could hope to produce in seven years. Thomson-CSF Reports That Its Deficit Shrank to 278 Million Francs in Half

PARIS (AP) - Thomson-CSF, the electronics arm of the nationalized Thomson-Brandt electrical group, said Friday its first-half losses narrowed by about half from a year earlier.

It said it had a loss of 278 million francs ($34.9 million) in the January-June period, compared with a loss of 554.7 million francs in the first half

Thomson-CSF said sales rose 25 percent to 8.8 billion francs. The sharp rise was chiefly due to a number of large payments for detection systems and telecommunications equipment. The company said first-half losses in its telecommunications, parts and medical-equipment division offset profit in its radar- and detection-systems division

A recent government-inspired restructuring of the French electronics and telecommunications industry calls for an asset swap between Thomson-CSF and Cie. Générale d'Electricité in which Thomson-CSF transferred practically all its money-losing telephone and telecommunications operations to CGE. In exchange, Thomson is to take over CGE's military-equipment and -parts activities.

Ford to Buy 30% of Turkish Car Firm

DEARBORN, Michigan (AP) - Ford Motor Co. will buy 30 percent of Otomobil Sanayii Anomin Sirketi, a Turkish automaker, over the next three years as part of a plan to expand Ford's presence in the region, Ford year.

A Ford spokesman declined to give the value of the acquisition, terms of which include putting two Ford representatives on the Turkish company's nine-member board.

The Turkish company, also known as Otosan, makes cars and trucks principally of Ford design, such as transit and cargo trucks, as well as Ford diesel and gasoline engines. Otrosan markets its products in Turkey through six Ford-franchised dealers. How will continue helping the company with the design but will not manage its plants, the spokesman said.

Warner Communications had rerted a net profit of $78.7 million, r $1.21 a share, in the third quarter of last year, and earnings of $224.8 million, or $3.46 a share, for the first nine months of 1982.

The company had announced Thursday that it was laying off a third of its employees at the New York headquarters of Atari, reducing the staff by about 250 people.

More than 2,500 Atari workers have been dismissed so far this year ago.

Friday's statement reported a loss of $180.3 million at Warner Communication's consumer-electronics business in the third quarter and a loss of $536.3 million for the Still some analysts are saying that the outlook is better. Craig V. Sloane at ACLI International Commodity Services, for example, predicted that the recovery would pick up worldwide and copper prices would rise as a result. He aid that the spot price would climb to 72 to 75 cents in six months and to 80 cents in a year.

Patricia T. Foley, with Commodities Research Unit, is slightly more optimistic, forecasting prices in the high 70-cent range six months from now and in the mid-80-cent range a year from now.

Having pared their costs by closing mines and streamlining opera-tions, U.S. companies are estimated to have reduced their break-even costs to 80 to 85 cents a pound, but, analysts said, prices still might not rise enough for them to turn a prof-

They said Phelps Dodge's efforts to cut its break-even point, coupled with the crisis in the industry, helps explain why it has bargained so hard with its unionized workers in Arizona. Those workers have been striking for the past four months.

"Phelps Dodge is usually considered the lowest-cost producer," Mr. Cleaver said. "It used to be such a sure thing that people used to call it widows' and orphans' stock. It shocked a lot of people when they lost $3.59 a share last year and cut their dividend to zero.

Analysts are divided over the earnings picture for U.S. produc-ers. Mr. Cleaver predicted that Phelps Dodge would turn a small profit this year. And he said that Asarco Inc. and Newmont Mining Corp. also would be in the black, thanks to their silver operations.

But some analysts said U.S. producers could still lose money in the second half.

LOS ANGELES - Toyota Motor Co. of Japan is reluctant to turn over certain documents requested by the U.S. Federal Trade Commission in its review of a proposed joint venture with General Motors Corp. because of worries about the "security" of its data, GM's chairman said.

The issue has the future of the joint venture "in the balance," Roger Smith said in an interview Thursday before he spoke at the Los Angeles Area Chamber of look conference.

Toyota and General Motors announced an agreement Feb. 14 to build 200,000 small cars a year at GM's closed assembly plant in Fremont, California, beginning next April, pending the FTC's approval of the joint venture. The agency Chase spokesman Steve Rauten-berg in New York said Friday the antitrust review would be completed by summer but that timetable has been pushed back on several occasions, in some cases because of problems in translating Toyota information to English from Japa-

> "These people are Japanese and grew up under a Japanese government," Mr. Smith said. "A lot of things the FTC wants seem strange

Moreover, "Washington, D.C., like many other capitals, has difficulty maintaining security over a variety of items, Mr. Smith said, which is a major concern of the Japanese company as it fears that it could be hurt competitively if the information ever became public.

Mr. Smith would not disclose the type of documents sought by the FTC, but an industry source re-portedly said the FTC had asked for confidential information on Toyota's profits so it can decide if the venture would hurt other U.S. automakers.

Toyota officials could not be reached for comment.

PARIS - The Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development said Friday that an agreement on interest rates for government-backed export credits had received final approval, as expected, and would take effect Saturday. Senior OECD officials said that one of the plan's most attractive features was an automatic-adjustment mechanism that would eliminate annual negotiations on the issue. The negotiations are usually long and tense.

OECD sources gave this breakdown of the new rate structure: • For advanced developing countries, including those in Eastern Europe, the current minimum rate of 11.35 percent on loans with repayment periods of over five years is to fall to 10.7 percent. This is the type of financing where the bulk of subsidizing occurs.

• Rates on export credits for poor developing countries will • The 12.4-percent rate on export credits for industrialized nations is unchanged. The various minimum rates are known as the matrix. Starting Jan. l, the sources explained, the matrix rates are to be adjusted automatically every six months to reflect more accurately market interest

The adjustments would be pegged to a weighted average of interest rates for the five major reserve currencies over the preceding six months. Those currencies are the U.S. dollar, the yen, the Dent-sche mark, the French franc and the British pound.

OECD sources said that, for example, if the weighted average were to rise by at least 50 basis points, or said Friday. one-half of a percentage point, then the matrix would move in line with

A major snag in the negotiations was removed earlier this week when France agreed to drop its demand for a cut of one percentage point in the rates, notably for developing nations, while U.S. negotiators pushed for higher rates.

Largely because world rates have been rising. France agreed to the proposed rates, but won agreement to postpone restoration of the rate cuts for the various categories of nations, also called for in the plan, until 1985. Many countries, includrestoration to begin next year.

"We are satisfied with the way the agreement has been worked out," a senior Finance Ministry official in Paris said. But he discounted reports that the new agreement would boost world trade substantially. "Signing of certain contracts have been delayed, and there will be some catching up, but it is a short-term reaction." he said.

Price Index Rose 0.1% in Japan In September

TOKYO — Japan's whole-sale price index rose 0.1 percent to 100.9 in September, from 100.8 in August, the Bank of Japan said Friday.
The bank said the index, which is based on 100 in 1980. showed a year-to-year decline for the ninth successive month in September. The 12-month drop was 3.2 percent, compared with a 2.9-percent decline in August.

It said the September year-to-year decrease was attributable largely to a decline in imported-oil prices and to the yea's improved position against the dollar.

The yen's average rate was 242.84 to the dollar last month, compared to 262.74 a year earlier, the bank said.

Tokyo Stock Fall Is Biggest in '83

TOKYO - Share prices on the stock market here declined an average of 148.72 Friday to close at 9,323.63. It was the largest one-day drop in 1983, dealers said.

Selling by foreign investors ac-celerated the decline, which followed a drop of 90.90 on Thursday. Foreign and Japanese investors were concerned about political developments after the sentencing Wednesday of Kaknei Tanaka, the former prime minister, to four years in prison for accepting a bribe, dealers said. They also cited tension in the Middle East.

BOOKS

By Elmore Leonard. 283 pp. $14.95. Arbor House, 235 East 45th St., New York, N.Y. 10017.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

JOE LABRAVA knows his way around, especially South Miami Beach and environs. He notices things. He's tough and smart, though by no means ruthless, which is something that gets him in trouble now and then in Elmore Leonard's latest novel (his "7th"book, no less), "LaBrava." Joe is a former Internal Revenue Service officer, collection division, and a former Secret Service agent who once did duty guarding Bess Truman at home in Inde- pendence, Missouri. "Not even counting protectivedetail in Mrs. Truman's living room," LaBrava reflects, "a life that sounded exciting was 80 percent

So in most respects, Joe LaBrava is fairly stan-dard issue from the supply room of the tough-guy school of from But Joe has retired from governminent service now and has taken up serious photography, if one can call serious the sort of pictures that prompt reviewers to write, "The aesthetic subtext of his work is the systematic exposure of artistic pretension." But whatever the quality of his work,

DENNIS THE MENACE

LaBrava's photography and his fascination with cinematic illusion are what keep Leonard's new novel from being just another exchange of chicanery

Now this may seem a somewhat complicated thing to say about a novelist with all the moves that Leonard has, especially when he seems to have his punches more completely under control than in any of the half-dozen or so of his previous novels that I happen to have read. As usual, his dialogue is so authentic that it dances off the page, whether it's Joe LaBrava talking, or his friend, old Maurie Zola, who owns beachfront real estate and remembers Miami when the right kind of people came down for the season. Now "they got video cameras mounted up on cament poles, close-circuit TV, so the cops can watch the muggings, the dope transactions, and not have to leave the stations.

As usual, the characters flash on and off in multicolored neon: Paco Boza, who travels around in a wheelchair he stole from Eastern Airlines "because he didn't like to walk and because he thought was cool, a way for people to identify him" ("What does he do?" somebody asks LaBrava. 'About $200 worth of cocaine a day."); or Cundo Rey, a criminal-export from Cuba who, when he isn't hot-wiring cars, spends his night-hours go-go dancing under a disco spotlight both for narcissistic gratification and the cash that the female patrons stuff into his leopard-skin underwear, or Jean Shaw, the slightly faded film-star friend of Maurie Zola's who lives with the memories of the spider-woman roles that made her famous.

novel's plot is intriguingly mystifying. One sordid Miami Beach evening, LaBrava has a run-in with a sociopathic hulk named Richard Nobles, who takes his pleasure from beating up women who happen to catch his fancy. It soon develops that an extortion scheme is being aimed at Jean Shaw, Maurie Zola's film-star friend, whom LaBrava has met and gotten sexually involved with, though he isn't sure whether it's her he desires or the cinematic image he fell in love with when he was 12 years old. A crudely typewritten note informs Jean Shaw that if she wants to avoid being killed, she must simply pay $600,000 to the extortionist, according to written instructions that will shortly follow.

Now here comes what ultimately makes "La-Brava" unusual as a thriller. It's obvious to everyone that it has to be Nobles who is behind the extortion scheme. So all LaBrava and the police have to do is catch him making a wrong move, and the threat to Jean Shaw will be ended. But is Nobles really as stupid as he appears to be, or is someone manipulat-ing him into being a decoy? And what about LaBrava's dawning memory of the resemblance the scam bears to the plot of one of Jean Shaw's less wellremembered movies? Can it be that LaBrava, hung up as he is on photography, is not only in love with cinematic fantasist?

I'm afraid I'm making "LaBrava" sound a little on the French side, something like the fever-dream unusual about "LaBrava" is that no matter how complicated its implications grow, it remains firmly compleaned its implications grow, it remains in may rooted in its realistic milieu. And despite all the double-crossing maybem it metes out, nobody gets hurt who doesn't deserve to. The only innocent victim is the dream of Florida as a golden sunset for the old and infirm to fade peacefully into. But then "LaBrava" isn't the first book in which Elmore Leonard has blasted that dream to smithereens. Nor for that matter will it be his last.

ST. LOUIS - They're calling it the Rebirth of the Blues in this city, but that's a little misleading. Neither blues music nor the Blues nckey team ever really died. They just haven't veen that popular in recent years.

But last year, there was reason to believe that the St. Louis Blues were close to expiring. Ralton Purina, after losing money on the club, ried to sell the Blues last summer to some avestors who wanted to move the club to Saskaoon, Canada. When the National Hockey League blocked the sale, Raiston gave up the

For lack of a buyer, the chib was about to be issolved and the players were about to be sent to other teams via a dispersal draft. In a ist-minute rescue, the Blues were purchased by group headed by Harry Omest, 60, a Beverly tills, California, businessman and hockey mut or a reported $3 million in cash and notes of $4

Blues' 4-1 start — the team's best start in 17 seasons — but mostly because the town loves hockey. More than 13,000 turned out on opening night, 14,000 for the second game. But Tuesday against Vancouver, there were only 8,000, and on Thursday against Los Angeles, only 8,387 showed up.

Ralston Purina, meanwhile, has been getting negative publicity for "deserting" the Blues. If St. Louis is a big bookey town — the club led the league in attendance from 1970 to 1975 - he's not going to sell.

"The people here have extended themselves for us," he said. "Anybody who takes over something from somebody thinks he can do a better job. I think I can do the job. I'm a guy who went from selling programs at 11, to pro-ducing teen-age fairs in the '60s to the entertainment and sports business."

3d Royal Pleads Guilty In Federal Drug Probe

KANSAS CITY, Kansas (AP)
-- Outfielder Jerry Martin of the Kansas City Royals pleaded guilty to a charge of attempted cocame ession Friday -the third team member in two days to enter a guilty plea in the U.S. government's continuing cocaine probe.

Martin, 34, who spent most of the season on the disabled list, faces a maximum one-year prison sentence and $5,000 fine.

Willie Wilson, the American League batting champion in 1982, first baseman Willie Aikens pleaded guilty to the same charges on Thursday.

All three players were scheduled to be sentenced Nov. 17, but Assistant U.S. Attorney Amanda Meers said she could not rule out the pos-sibility that the players would be placed on probation.

The three players could face disciplinary action by the American League or Baseball Commissioner Bowie Knhn.

"Plea bargaining doesn't change the facts. When we have the facts, we will make our decision," Kuhn said Thursday night.

"We have been following the case right along," Kuhn said. "Obviously we are going to continue the investigation. When the investigation is completed, we'll have further comment." Chuck Adams, a member of the Commissioner's staff, said: "Our basic policy with the amnesty program is if the player comes forward on his own, he will be helped. If they don't come forward, they face a pumitive action."

The French minister of finance ran over to Regan and said. "Stop the fight. You're killing my boy." Regan said, "Let them continue for a little while longer. It's good practice for them."

A few minutes later the franc was being counted out, and the dollar was hardly perspiring.

The next one to step in the ring was the British pound. Its manager, Margaret Thatcher, was rubbing its gloves and giving it instructions. But the British pound could hardly stand on its legs and after playing with it for a round, the dollar knocked it out of the ring.

Mrs. Thatcher said to Regan, "Your president is going to hear cies

The next contender was the West German mark, who had held the currency championship for years. It was a real grudge match.

The Ballad of Sam Hunt

By Michael Kernan Washington Past Service

WASHINGTON — The single and only reason I am barging into Nicky's, probably the last great authentic American bar left on Wisconsin Avenue, is that I am supposed to be meeting a New Zealand poet named Sam

Hunt who insists on being interviewed in pubs. After the 3 o'clock glare, it is as dark as the vest pocket of my funeral suit, and the first thing I see is a white shirt with the collar wide open like Balzac used to wear them.

Then I see there is a guy inside the shirt, and his hair is in bright yellow ringlets that dangle there daring you to say one word, and the shirt is halfway down off his shoulder, and in general he looks like he just got off the floor in a brawl that is not going his way but soon will, judging from the lightning in his stitted green eyes.

The bartender is on red alert because this 6-foot-4 apparition has just lurched in through the back door (everbody lurches at Nicky's; it's the floors) with his boots and tight black pants and belt buckle big enough to make a pretty good riot shield.

"I believe you are Sam Hunt," I say, having seen his picture on the new Penguin book of "Sam Hunt Collected Poems" and having been thoroughly informed by the New Zealand Embassy that he is a sometime truck driver, a wanderer, a singer of ballads and denizen of pubs, the country's most popular poet and a national treasure who is reputed to have said he is happiest in the company of

He pumps my hand and remembers my name and gives me a tremendous, cheerful hello. He calls for drinks. I am on the wagon, I say, I will have a club soda, and so without missing a beat he orders a club soda, too, and then I say, No, really, for heaven's sake, so he orders two club sodas

Now I consider that very companionable. Prince Philip himself couldn't have done it more gracefully.

We find a table outside. Across the street, a beagle has been hit by a car, but it seems to be all right. "I should write him a Bow-Wow Poem," the poet says. One in his book is called "A Sick-Bay Bow-Wow":

The dog's back leg rapped open, Ine dog's back leg rapped open,
Some weekender's possum trap:
Ignoring rage, I bind up
Minstrel's leg the best I can . . .
Then this most most most g scene:
All the dogs of Bottle Creek Come visiting. They know he's sick

Bring him bones though times are lean.

Minstrel is a sheep dog who lives with him and his 7-year-old son Tom in a $35-a-year boathouse on Cook Strait, between the main New Zealand islands. "The strait, she's wild," he says. "Makes Magellan Strait look like a birdbath." A stingray lives under the boathouse, he says.

The English would call Sam Hunt a Bodgie. It is a '50s word, something like Mods and Rockers. "It's rebels, is Raised gently as the youngest son of a rollicking, balladsinging barrister who had married a woman 30 years younger, he stuttered in school - rebellion begins behind the teeth - and despised the Christian brother at the Catholic school who constantly picked on him to read aloud. Once he did read a poem he had found for himself, a strong one with hard words in it, and so lilting that he around the big veranda once, read it perfectly, and the Christian brother had just two words: "Get out!"

Sam Hunt watches the beagle limping stoically up the street and says, "I figured then that if people can get that angry over a poem, there must be something to it." So he ran away at 14 to be a poet. Since then he has written nine volumes of poems and appeared in the papers and on New Zealand's two TV channels enough to make him, after the prime minister, the most widely recognized person in the country. He figures he has been on the road 17 of his 37 years. He is divorced and footloose. Travel helps him to think.

"I work with musicians a lot," the poet says. "The performing side is very important to me. It's from my father's side. I recite in jails, schools, parliament buildings, universities, pubs, everywhere. My higgest audience was 80,000 people. Some of the critics think because people like it, it must be schmaltz. But it's not." "My Father Scything":

My father was sixty when I was born, twice my mother's age. But he's never been around very much, neither at the mast round the world; nor when I wanted him most. He was somewhere else, like in his upstairs Dickens-like law office counting the stars; or sometimes out with his scythe on Sunday working the path through the lupins toward the sea.

And the photograph album I bought myself on leaving home, lies open on the shelf at the one photograph I have of him, my father scything. In the same album beside him, one of my mother. I stuck them there on the page together.

He jumps up and shows how his father taught him to scythe. "From the hips," he says, swinging in a crouch like Dempsey. "It's all in the hips."

Hunt has been visiting on a New Zealand Arts Council grant. He has been in New York arranging a performing tour for next April. He looks forward to seeing Tom again. He adored New York

"It's in me blood, I think. Ireland and New York. I know John Berryman and Robert Lowell by heart. Anne Sexton. Bob Dylan: a great American poet. Not as revered here as he should be. I met a cabbie who knew Bob Dylan, he'd written two novels, the cabbie, every cabbie in New York has written two novels — I think you can't get your license till you have - and he was driving me across town at 110 miles an hour shouting Bob lied to me! Bob lied to me!' But Bob Dylan never lied."

You can see how New York would appeal to Sam Hunt. His short, crisp poems are high velocity, too. Full of people leaving especially women. Full of whiskey. Full of rain. A kid at a school asked him why it as always raining in his poems, and he said that when it's sumny he is too busy living to write poems.

Some of them are simple laments, baying at the moon. Some others seem simple, but they pull at you more than you would think they could. "Death's Dance":

Grandma Weldon at the local store remembers well - a girl of four . a party here: so many guests that when they all joined hands to dance they circled out the main front door into the living room then out and down again the corridor —

"Remember that without a doubt!" says Grandma Weldon at the store.

Every time Leslie the waitress pops out of the door Sam Hunt raises a forefinger. Then she brings another beer. He is talking about civilization. He would like to live in it two or three months a year, but no more. Today he took a break from the receptions and all, and awarded himself

Then be is talking about Rimband and Bandelaire and St. John of the Cross, and he admits that even though he didn't finish school, he learned about words at home. "Lot of talk in my house. Lot of reading. My mother read poems aloud. Γ m a talker more than a writer. The books are an afterthought." He roars some lines from Dylan Thomas, out over the sluggish afternoon traffic and the dazed heads of a couple trudging down the sidewalk. They don't turn. They are pretending they didn't hear what they just heard.

It is time. I say I will see him again, and we shake hands as though I never would. After a minute I turn and watch him striding up the street toward the embassy. His white shirt is bagging out at the waist. People are always trying to say what a poet is exactly, and I think you could do worse that this: A poet is a person who finds poetry. Especially when he finds it at 4 o'clock on a weekday afternoon in the 2300 block of Wisconsin Avenue.
